WASHINGTON

AgriBusiness Trading Group and Peoples Company are excited to offer a dryland wheat farm for sale in Whitman County, Washington. Located in the highly desirable and fertile Palouse region, this farm consists of 261.00 +/- deeded acres and is approximately nine miles south of St. John, Washington.

There are 251.89 +/- cropland acres, per the Whitman County Farm Service Agency, of which 27.03 +/- acres are currently enrolled in the Conservation Reserve Program (CRP). The farm is leased to a local tenant under a cash-rent lease agreement that expires on September 30, 2030. Lease payments are due in two annual installments on March 1 and September 15. The tenant receives all CRP payments and is responsible for all practice installation and mid-contract management practices. The historical crop rotation includes spring and winter wheat varieties.

There are no structures located on this farm or included in the sale. This is a dryland farm with no irrigation water rights located on the property or included in the sale.

Region & Climate

Characterized by its soft, fertile ground and rolling hills, Whitman County produces the most wheat of any county in the United States and averages more than twenty inches of precipitation received annually. Bordered by the Snake River to the south and the mountains of Idaho to the east, the Palouse is ideally situated in the heartland of Washington State's grain production. In addition to wheat, the county is first in the nation for edible dry pea production, barley, and lentils.

Soils & Topography

The primary soil types on this farm include Calouse silt loam, Athena silt loam, and Almota silt loam. These soils are primarily loess-derived, originating from wind-blown sediment accumulated over time. Loess is highly fertile and rich in nutrients like nitrogen, phosphorus, and potassium. The silt content in these soils provides a well-balanced combination of moisture retention and drainage. They can hold enough moisture to support crops during dry spells while efficiently draining excess water to prevent waterlogging. Whitman County's landscape is characterized by rolling hills and undulating terrain, with elevations generally ranging from 1,000 to 3,000 feet. This farm's topography ranges from 1,612 to 2,098 feet above sea level.
